

HOW TO BUILD A COMPLETE SCENE WITH AGENT ONE

From one message to a fully produced shot.

Section 1 — The Brief

Most people overthink the brief. They spend hours building decks, writing shot lists, mapping out every detail before they ever open a tool. I sent one paragraph. That's it. One paragraph into Agent One and what came back was a full production breakdown — character sheets, scene descriptions, shot angles, color direction. Here is exactly how it happened and how you can do the same thing.

Concept: a man and a chimpanzee rob a bank in the Albuquerque desert.

Vehicle: red Ferrari Testarossa.

Cast: TRIV and his chimpanzee sidekick.

Location: flat New Mexico desert, a bank, a dive bar.

Tool: Agent One inside InVideo.

Section 2 — The Message I Sent

This is the exact message I dropped into Agent One. Nothing more.

One paragraph. No formatting. No shot list. No mood board. Just the idea in plain words.

Section 3 — What Agent One Built Back

From that one message Agent One returned a complete production breakdown.

A scene-by-scene shot list with camera angles, character behavior descriptions, location detail, and color direction for each sequence.

It gave me angles I had not thought of. The chimp at ground level pointing the gun up at the camera. The wanted poster on the pole with the road behind it. The rearview mirror with TRIV's eyes locked on the police car behind him.

Section 4 — The Prompt Stack

You do not write the prompts yourself. You tell Agent One what you want to generate and it builds the prompt for you. Then it generates the image directly inside the tool.

Below are some of the shots it built for this production. Each one started as a one-line description from me.

Outside the Bank *The shot that started it all.
TRIV and the chimp in front of the Testarossa.*

PROMPT:

A man steps out of a red Ferrari Testarossa, driver door swung open, one leg already on the ground. White ribbed sleeveless tank top, straight blue jeans, tall brown leather cowboy boots. Black duffel bag in hand. A chimpanzee climbs out simultaneously from the other side, tactical backpack strapped to its back, automatic rifle in hand. Behind them: a small single-story stucco bank building, sun-bleached beige walls, no signage, flat cracked asphalt parking lot, American flag on a pole, flat Albuquerque desert stretching wide, red mesa formations under a pale blue sky. Hard natural midday sun, dust in the air. Shot on 16mm film. 14mm lens, f/8.0. Everything in deep focus, all sharp. Handheld, slight drift. Visible film grain, natural and organic. No digital sharpening, no bloom, no lens flare.

The Wanted Poster Electricity pole on the left. Desert road on the right. "TRIV & HIS SIDEKICK — DEAD OR ALIVE."

PROMPT:

Medium shot. A weathered wooden electricity pole stands in the left foreground, close to the camera, dominating the left half of the frame. Stapled to the pole facing the camera is a wanted poster — large, printed on yellowed paper, edges curling, sun-bleached. The poster reads "WANTED" across the top in bold block letters. Below it two images side by side — TRIV on the left, the chimpanzee on the right. A reward amount printed below. The poster is slightly crooked, stapled at the top corners, flapping slightly in the desert wind. The pole itself is old — cracked wood, a few old staples and torn paper scraps from previous postings. The right half of the frame opens up to the flat two-lane Albuquerque desert road stretching back into the distance — yellow center line, cracked asphalt, sparse scrub on the shoulders, red mesa formations in the far distance, pale blue sky above. Hard natural midday sun casting a sharp shadow from the pole across the dirt shoulder. The poster catches the direct sunlight — warm, bleached, real. Shot on 16mm film. 14mm lens, f/8.0. The pole and the wanted poster sharp in the foreground, the desert road sharp behind to the right. Handheld, slight drift. Visible film grain, natural and organic. No digital sharpening, no bloom, no lens flare.

The Dive Bar TRIV and the chimp in a dark booth. Schlitz neon. Duffel bag on the table. Post-robbery calm.

PROMPT:

A man and a chimpanzee sit side by side in a worn leather booth inside a dark dive bar. The man wears a white ribbed sleeveless tank top, straight blue jeans, tall brown leather cowboy boots. He has a whiskey glass in hand, leaning back in the booth, laughing — head tilted, completely relaxed, totally at ease. The chimpanzee sits right beside him, its own drink on the table in front of it, also animated — mouth open, vocalizing, rocking slightly with energy, the way a chimp does when it is excited and happy. Black coarse fur, bare dark facial skin, compact muscular build. They are mid-conversation, mid-laugh, like two guys celebrating after a long day. The black duffel bag sits on the table between them, unzipped, fat stacks of banded cash visible spilling out. The bar around them: dark wood paneling, sticky vinyl booths, old framed photos on the walls, a glowing Schlitz Beer neon sign casting warm red light across the scene, dim pendant lights above, a half-empty bottle of whiskey on the table, beer glasses, ashtrays. The whole space is dark, warm, amber-toned. Nobody else in the bar is paying attention. Shot on 16mm film. 14mm lens, f/8.0. Everything in deep focus — both figures, the duffel bag, the neon sign, the bar interior, all sharp. Handheld, slight drift. Visible film grain, natural and organic. No digital sharpening, no bloom, no lens flare.
